ANIG7235 1:72 Martin XB-51. In early 1946, USAAF issued requirement for a new attack bomber in succession to the A-26. Martin Company proposed its design and won the competition with designation, XA-45. Soon later USAAF revised its requirement for better close-support bombing. Martin accepted the new requirement and was received contract for two prototypes, redesignated XB-51. The first XB-51 made its first flight on Oct 1949. It became the fastest ground support bomber at the time. In 1950, with Korean War outbreak, USAF called for a need of new night intruder bomber. The XB-51 was entered the contest in competition with English Electric Canberra. The XB-51 was faster but its endurance was poor than the Canberra. After a fly-off in 1951, the Canberra was chosen as the winner. Finally the XB-51 project was cancelled in 1952. Although Martin lost an order for XB-51 but received license to produce Canberra under designation B-57. £54.80 £46.64

ANIG7236 1:72 Yakolev Yak-36 'Freehand'. In 1960, Alexander Yakovlev watched British VTOL prototype, the Short SC.1 at Farnborough. He was so impressed by the VTOL concept and started his own VTOL study. A year later in 1961, with success of the Hawker Kestrel conventional flight, Yakovlev quickly decided to build a test-bed in the class of the Kestrel, with vectored nozzles which could rotate through 90°. A small jet nozzle was also installed under the nose probe and tail cone for pitch control. The retractable door was fitted under the nose and the fuselage centre to reduce hot gas re-ingestion. Three flight articles were built, numbered 36, 37 & 38. First hover flight was in 1964 and first full VTOL flight completed in 1966. The Yak-36 was first publicly displayed at the Domodedovo Air show in 1967. NATO was shocked by its appearance and gave it designation "Freehand". However, the flight performance was justified unstable but it provided various flight data to the further operational Yak-38 Forger. £28.50 £24.26

New Aircraft Modelling Magazine

The publishers of Tamiya Model Magazine are planning to launch a new Model Aircraft Magazine on July 28th. Mock-ups of sample copy on their website appears to indicate that it will be in a similar style and format to the Tamiya one. No surprise there. Perhaps more interestingly the editor is going to be Richard Franks who resigned from Scale Aviation Modeller International a few months ago.

Upcoming model show.
Southdown's Model show
Saturday 20th August 2005
Lancing Parish Hall
South Street
Lancing
West Sussex

It is about 5 minutes from the A27 road. We will supply you with 2 six foot tables and if you want to bring any unwanted kits along to sell from under your tables you are more than welcome to do so. The show will be open to the public from 10 to 4pm. We will be there from about 7.30am onwards. There are refreshments on site, also there is a cafe and pub along the road (about 10-15 metres). There is plenty of free parking around the back of the hall.

The show is around 12 miles from Fort full of models.

Thanks to Wally & Peter for sending this info in.
